„Some people think we’re made of flesh and blood and bones. Scientists say we’re made of atoms. But I think we are made of stories. When we die, that’s what people remember, the stories of our lives and the stories that we told.“

Ruth Stotter

Introduction

Stories - for entertainment, to relax, but also for educational purposes and targeted competence development already in early childhood education. Stories- as teaching method - as „highest form of teaching“ according to the neurobiologist Gerald Hüther- under the condition that they are told well.

In the EU funded project „Sinbad“ we combined all this. We dealt with the concept of competence, the selection of appropriate stories, the structure and finally the telling of stories. In addition, we focused on possibilities how to actively involve children in the narrative process in order to support their competence development based on stories with different activities.

The project results were presented at two multiplier events, in Manavgat(Turkey) and Leipzig (Germany). This conference paper summarises the two events.

2) Multiplier event Leipzig, Germany

a. Summary of the event

The multiplier event in Leipzig took place 23 June 2016 at the wisamar seminar room. While the morning session illuminated the topic Storytelling in education from different perspectives, the afternoon session was dedicated to storytelling workshops.

The conference started with a welcome by the project coordinator, Sabine Röhrig-Mahhou, who started with background information about the added value of storytelling in education. Storytelling is the eldest form of communication and teaching, it helps until today to transmit important contents in an attractive and easy understandable way. She referred to the neurobiologist Gerald Hüther who emphasizes that information given with the help of stories are memorized faster and better than facts only thanks to emotions and pictures that activate several brain cells. Sabine Roehrig-Mahhou besides introduced the Sinbad project and showed the main project results.

Right afterwards Peter Frühmann gave a presentation about competence based learning which he had prepared together with Jaap van Lakerveld. He introduced the concept of competence, the EU key competences with their components and the pedagogical framework of the Sinbad project that served as basis for all outputs.

Dr. Michl Zirk, professional storyteller and lecturer at the University Nürnberg-Erlangen, talked about storytelling as teaching method. He especially pointed out the fact that no one - neither University professor nor persons who left school after 9 years - are able to easily understand complicated contents in scientific language. It is the task of all teachers and lecturers to present such contents in an understandable language. Storytelling fosters phantasy and problem-solving thinking, it besides supports the development of linguistic structures. As teaching method, in addition it brings fun for both, teachers and learners - a good condition for assuring learning progress.

Prof. Dr. Kristin Wardetzky from the University of Arts Berlin and initiator of Erzählzeit (Storytelling time) since years is using storytelling in order to support children with migrant background. She shared her experience and the great added value of stories that even overcome language barriers. She recommended two books for intercultural storytelling: World tales by Idries Shah and the story collection by brothers Grimm (published by Heinz Rölleke).

Prof. Dr. Helga Andresen from the University of Flensburg shared the results of a study in which she initiated a storytelling project for and with children, focusing on their linguistic development. The aim was to motivate children to start telling stories which worked well thanks to a story book where the pre-school teachers wrote down the stories of the children.

Maria Carmela Marinelli, a professional storyteller and theater pedagogue, as last speaker of the morning session, invited the participants to one of the storytelling workshops. She talked about her experiences when telling stories for and with children and already shared one or the other story with the conference participants.

After lunch two parallel workshops took place. Maria Carmela Marinelli focused on the art of storytelling with hands, feet and heart. Her workshop was very practice oriented and concentrated on the presentation of stories. Anne Berger and Sabine Röhrig-Mahhou gave a part of the Sinbad workshops which also included the theoretical background. They introduced the relation to competence development, showed how to remember stories, carried out some activities how to present a story and discussed which competence development activities can be carried out based on the story.

Evaluation questionnaires were handed out to all participants who gave anonymous feedback. Possible marks were:

- 1 (excellent)
- 2 (very good)
- 3 (good)
- 4 (not so good)
- 5 (not good at all)

The average score of the whole conference was 1,58 which is a very good results. Especially the practice oriented storytelling workshop of Maria Carmela Marinelli was highly appreciated but also all other results are promising. Many people already asked for workshops in their premises.
